Binding JDR is a major, quite excellent, and first step into the possibilities available to address the SCC's concerns. It contradicts the recent negative comments on this site by Michael Lesage regarding the initiative and accomplishments of our Superior Court of Justice and its chief justice. It shows Lesage's criticism — so far as family law is concerned — was not fair.

Binding judicial dispute resolution is a good step forward ...

Dispute resolution process and results can, in general, be kept confidential. (There are certain circumstances where the law does require disclosure of information though, such as the "duty to report" suspected or confirmed child abuse required by the Child and Family Services Act in each province and territory.)
